Dear Vita and the Tabby Card team,

Tabby Card is an unusual asset: a credit product growing at +142% GMV year over year that is simultaneously being asked to generate margin. Most fast-growing credit products buy growth by deferring monetization; the fact that Tabby is running both at once, with a product-led program, tells me the team has real discipline about unit economics. That discipline is what I want to work inside.

My most relevant foundation is Kvitt Payment Solutions, which I co-founded and built from zero to acquisition, absorbed into the girocard ecosystem and operated by Sparkasse. Kvitt was a mobile P2P payments product, which meant I lived in the intersection of customer-facing payment UX, PSP integration, and the regulatory envelope of the German banking system. The parallels to owning billing cycles, fee structures and repayment experience at Tabby are direct: every edge case in a payment flow is also a compliance question, and every pricing decision is a retention question dressed differently.

At EMIL Group I ran an 18-person delivery organisation for a B2B SaaS insurance platform and shipped the Claims Center from concept to production. More relevant here: I restructured the team when it was hemorrhaging senior engineers and losing client trust, and I cut time-to-market for new insurance product launches from months to under a week. The stakeholder surface, Finance, Legal, Compliance, Risk, mirrors exactly what the Tabby Card role describes, and I am comfortable being the person who owns a trade-off rather than escalating it.

I want to be transparent about one gap: I have not owned revolving credit, grace periods, or minimum payment logic end to end. My card-adjacent experience is on the payments and PSP side. I flag this not as a disqualifier but because I think you should hear it from me first, not discover it in week three. The analytical and regulatory-stakeholder muscle is there; the specific credit-card billing mechanics I will learn fast, and I have a demonstrated pattern of doing exactly that when entering new regulated domains.

On the KSA expansion: I have experience adapting a product to a new regulatory environment under time pressure (the FCAS programme involved multinational compliance across DE, FR, ES, IT), and I have actively targeted the UAE as my next location, I am willing to relocate to Dubai or Abu Dhabi, which means the GCC market is a genuine interest, not a concession.

Best regards, Philipp Hilbert
