Dear DIN Media hiring team,

DIN Media sits at a moment most product organisations never reach: a century of institutional credibility being converted, deliberately and at pace, into digital services that experts actually want to use daily. That problem – making authoritative, complex content operable by people who need it to do their real work – is the product challenge I have spent the last decade solving in different guises.

At Emil Group I joined a B2B InsurTech SaaS in crisis: a 17-person team delivering inconsistently, client trust eroding, senior developers leaving. I split the team into structured Scrum units, reintroduced velocity tracking, ran weekly product workshops with clients, and delivered a Claims Center module from concept to production. Client trust was rebuilt and attrition dropped from near-total to a single departure. The mechanism there was not clever feature prioritisation alone – it was structured, transparent communication across every stakeholder level simultaneously, which is exactly what your job description identifies as central to this role.

At Rohde & Schwarz, working on the FCAS defence programme, I owned end-to-end feature delivery on an AI data management platform: writing user stories, defining acceptance criteria, supporting implementation, and managing GitOps rollout. I reduced deployment times from several days to 20–40 minutes by introducing ArgoCD-based GitOps, and I independently delivered in one week a feature a project lead had been requesting from engineers for over a year. The environment was ambiguous, multinational, and under constant pressure – conditions where pragmatic decision-making matters more than process purity.

Earlier, in my role as Proxy Product Owner at AOK ITSCare, I managed the migration of an internal webshop to Shopware, including complex catalogue integration and customisable approval policies for a health insurance buyer context – a direct encounter with the challenge of making a rules-heavy, structured product catalogue usable through a clean digital interface. That experience is closer to the DIN Media product challenge than it might first appear.

I bring ten years of product ownership across regulated, expert-facing, and technically complex domains. I am German-native, Berlin-based, authorised to work in Germany without restriction, and available within four weeks of an offer. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how my background maps to your current roadmap priorities.

Best regards, Philipp Hilbert
